Subject: Re: Hey there

WoW Gina, That was beautifully written, but I'm so touched that you felt you could share it with me.

I read through the whole thing mesmerized, and saved it for re-reading. I feel a little concern for your decision to go ahead with the marriage, I hope there's concrete benefit in that, because other than the legal and spiritual aspect, essentially you're continuing as is? Just curious, I'm sure you've your reasons. By the way, I work in New York City, and got married at City Hall (both times!)

My story? Wish I had time to write, as beautifully as you have. Suffice it to say, I never found true love except in my spiritual quests, though I did run into some special women in my life, who, unfortunately didn't satisfy my need for intellectual, spiritual and "fantasy" company. I'm a dreamer, but I do try to make them happen, I've started 4 support groups for mood disorder, started a website, bought one of the best chats on the net, trying to get involved in mental health advocacy at the national level, interfacing with many organizations. By profession, I'm a successful software manager in New York City, had my own company till last year, and will be 47 soon (looking and feeling 29).

Wonder if there's some other way we can talk - chat or phone, it would be easier. I would love to write, but my time's so crunched lately, I'm here trying to wrap this up before jumping into bed.

Thank you for writing to me. I really appreciate it. You should be proud of all that you've accomplished, as should Kevin. You deserve a great future ahead, my thoughts are with you.

Sam
