

From: Gina L. Turcotte <ginalyn@adelphia.net>

To: 'Philip Watkins'

Date: 4/23/2005 7:33:19 PM

Subject: Critical Analysis #2 and Counseling Model

Hey Phil... Yep, I'm still hanging in there... My 2nd critical analysis is late but will be submitted by the end of the semester (I hope) along with my Counseling Model.

Regarding the format and context of the Counseling Model, do you have a sample paper that I can look at? I'm unsure of the approach the paper should have: would it be bulleted as in a list of skills, competencies, approaches, etc. or would it be in a narrative 1st person point of view, or rather an objective, factual third-person perspective? What bits of information do you wish to see in this paper besides our approach and how we can support that particular approach? I noticed that the most important part of this text, for me, was the first 3 chapters. So, although I have been unsuccessful in reading this book completely, at the typing of this email, I'm going to make an effort to complete the reading as I find it fascinating and very helpful. However, I feel, for my approach to counseling, the first three chapters are paramount. So, I'm going to write my papers based on what information I have now. I will try to continue to read the book as I write.

If you could respond with some clarification about the context of the Model, it surely would be helpful.

Also, where can I pick up my graded #1 analysis?

I appreciate your tolerance and understanding about my inability to attend class. As it is, I've been compelled to reject overtime (which I've been scorned for as our house is 6 staff short) in order to focus on my school work. It's been a very difficult decision to make but it's nice to have the level of self-care and courage to say "no", especially since I know how important it is to have a full shift. Luckily for me, I've learned how to say "no" and feel less guilty. It's still a struggle though but I'm sure I'll figure it out.

Thanks for the feedback. Talk soon.

Gina Turcotte

-----Original Message-----

From: Philip Watkins [mailto:PWatkins@maine.edu]

Sent: Thursday, March 03, 2005 9:00 AM

To: ginalyn@adelphia.net

Subject: Re: Critical Analysis #1

Got it, thanks....

>>> "Gina L. Turcotte" <ginalyn@adelphia.net> 3/2/2005 9:19:34 PM >>>

Hey Phil.

Yeah, I know. Still haven't seen your smiling face in class yet. Ah, correction. Still haven't seen MY smiling face in class yet. :-)

Since I haven't had the pleasure of being in class as of yet, I am emailing to you my first critical analysis in MS Word format. If you so desire, I will otherwise bring a hard copy to class with me which hopefully will be this week, 3/4/05. I am required to work tomorrow, Thursday, until midnight but I will make every effort to attend class on Friday.

If my lack of attendance is becoming a problem, please let me know and I will alter my work schedule as to make attendance at school more likely. Otherwise, attached please find my first paper in final draft, MS Word, format.

Thank you.

Gina L. Turcotte

In the absence of Who You Are Not, Who You Are, is not...

