Good work Gina,
 these look fabulous. Just want to remind you that we are delving into treatment issues here and really should be run by Rebecca.

 Subject: Self Empowerment literature

Hey Tony... I've listed below literature which is available at the <http://www.channing-bete.com/> website regarding self-empowerment literature/workbooks for the kiddos that Ian and I have been speaking about. The cost for the literature falls anywhere between $1.15 - $2.99/each. There are some programs/kits that I think may be beneficial but their cost is much higher... However, I believe we could utilize many of these programs if we were able to get the purchases approved by Corporate. Take a look at the various links/brochures – I look forward to chatting with you about them.

Although there may appear to be several selections listed on this page, I assure you this is only about 1/10th of what is available for our boys, and the girls that will eventually filter through the program. I've only listed here those that I think would be immediately helpful.

Enjoy!!

Gina

What's Up(R) With Building Character

Adolescents find out why trust, responsibility, and respect add up to sound moral reasoning. Through "what if..." exercises, they learn how to make good decisions and establish their own value system. They discover that every action -- good and bad -- has consequences; learn the power of positive thinking; and recognize the importance of finding role models who have good character. Watch for stories, comics, and hypothetical situations that help readers understand that they don't have to agree with someone to respect them. 24 pages, 8 1/2" x 11". Ages 12-14
